Cal was on his way to where he had last seen the man in the dark outfit and the his round cap when the bus driving by on the road began to roar it's horn, he jumped backwards and thought maybe the noise was being directed at him for that moment when there, the sound glass which had followed. The sound of shards which were falling. He leapt back, away from the road, ahead of it to where the buses momentum had nearly tipped it leaving it prompt up against the traffic. The sign a top of him fell as he did, Another car spun in mid-air and passed above him and crashed, landing in the window of the hallmark greetings cards store. The screams and sudden panic began. People shoved each other ran in all directions. Cal now shocked, was falling back further even more and now looking up at the world he could no longer see, because the one he now looked it was more than other worldly to his own, what he saw now, was something entirely different. A world similar Cal's own but, this one overthrown, and had become, overcome by its new capsizing devastation.
